What does the client say	what does the client think	what does the client do	what does the client feel
Wants the websites to be easier to navigate so that visitors can find information without getting lost.	Thinks climate action should be accessible to small groups as well as individuals rather than it being only that large organizations can participate in it.	Publishes the pollinator newsletter; a monthly newsletter highlighting stuff happening around Environment-wise and those affecting the community.	The client feels that the current website is usable but outdated which may need some improvements
Wants an online repair cafe booking systems that people can schedule repairs more conveniently.	With the website having multiple resources It should show people practical ways to contribute to the environment	Runs the Repair Café, which fixes a variety of things for community members.	The client feels the website is too text heavy and wants some visual to better communicate the information.
Alongside The scheduling repairs, they want people to understand the requirements and what to expect before attending.	Thinks users need to see availability of people clearly so that they know whether a repair cafe time or volunteer is already booked.	*Run Smash Lab for youth which introduces young people to environmental activities around them	the client feels navigation inside the website is frustrating because the important information is not always easy to find.
Wants a searchable resource directory to shorten the process of looking for stuff in the website	Thinks users need to understand how to go around Repair Cafe because the booking process is a tad cofusing.	Runs youth and adult forums to encourage participation and discussions of matters within the community (Fridays for Future Youth Empowerment Fund)	They feel volunteers should receive more recognition as they form a large part of repair cafe and ECN as a general.
Wants to encourage recycling, reuse and thrifting as forms of environmental action.	Thinks users need to know the booking rules beforehand so that's they understand how repair cafe works.	Develops partnerships for example with the Salvation Army	The client feels the website could be more engaging while still remaining simple.
Wants to improve and expand the website so that it	Thinks resources should be able to be searched up	Highlight volunteers and their contributions	the client feels that users may need more certainty shows Envirocollective's current programs and activities in depth.	because some users may want to know only some specific type of information.	to recognize the people supporting the programs inside ECN	while approaching repair cafe including knowing about rules availability and what to bring when coming for appointments.
Wants to bring environmental groups together, making it a strong connection point for community action.	They think there should be a database where the activities are easily found by people who do not know how to use the website very well	*Offers micro-grants to some students thus supporting youth	the client feels the website needs better representation online so that's the people visiting the organization know all the activities
Wants the pollinator newspaper contents accessible so that the visitors can see updates and previous content in a structured way.	They think that volunteers should be visible to the people coming to the website beforehand.	*Promotes recycling, reuse and thrifting through its programs	The client feels like the website should show people practical ways they can participate in climate sectors.
Wants trustworthy environmental information so that the visitors can rely on the resources that are provided.	They think the website should be simple enough for volunteers to operate.	Share knowledge and skills through repair cafe and related activities
	They think visuals could communicate better and more effectively by showing events, activities and the volunteers themselves.	Networks with climate organizations does calling for environmental action even beyond Envirocollective itself.
		Highlight climate movements in history which can encourage other people to contribute to the cause(August 2018
